GUEST SPEAKER – Lieutenant Carol Germano, Danvers Police Department

A 1966 Lynn High School graduate Carol had always been interested in a career as a police officer but was pointed to other directions such as nursing, or teaching, etc. When she joined the military testing results indicated that she had ability as a Medic. After her military experience Carol attended Northeastern University majoring in Journalism. After she was encouraged to take the Danvers Police Exam-she scored 1st in the state. She was then the 2nd female officer to be hired by the town of Danvers—Nancy Bezemes being the first. Carol is now an expert in Forensic Reconstruction and the only one on the North Shore to have this expertise. She was called in to help out during 911 and uses skeleton remains, teeth, and bones to help solve crimes. Letting the evidence tell the story. Before becoming skilled in this science Carol dealt with rape and sexual assaults for the DPD for 16 years. She is also a hostage negotiator. Today there are three other female officers on the Danvers Police force. Even though the road wasn't always smooth and Carol was not encouraged to pursue her dreams she did so and has become a success story and has found a very important niche in her life. She has made a difference in many lives. A very interesting & inspiring story!
